

Judit Polgár won her first international chess tournament when she was only nine years old. Winning at a young age motivated her to become a grandmaster—one of the best chess players in the world. By the time she was fifteen in 1991, she indeed became the youngest grandmaster in the world and traveled the world playing other grandmasters. Garry Kasparov, a grandmaster, said she was great, but indicated that she wouldn't sustain it because she was a woman. Kasparov said that as a woman, Polgár should be in the home raising children, not playing chess.

MISSING SENTENCE

After this, he said that there was no limit to her skill.

Select the best sentence to complete the story:

Polgár felt empowered to challenge Kasparov's views on traditional gender stereotypes.

Polgár wanted to become the youngest grandmaster chess player and travel the world to play.

Polgár proved her critics wrong by being the first woman to beat him in a match in 2002.